

Progyny Adds Pelvic Floor Therapy, Continuing to Close Gaps in Care Across Women's Health

June 24, 2025

With nearly one third of women impacted by pelvic floor disorders, expanded care access and education from Progyny will help eliminate the silent suffering

NEW YORK, June 24, 2025 (GLOBE NEWSWIRE) -- Progyny, Inc. (Nasdaq: PGNY), a global leader in women's health and family building solutions, today announced that it is adding pelvic floor therapy to its comprehensive offering of women's health and family building solutions. With the expansion of its network of specialty trained women's health providers, and the addition of digital therapy, the company is further deepening its commitment to increasing the accessibility of specialized, timely care across the spectrum from preconception and maternal health to midlife and menopause.

One in three women experience pelvic floor issues, with one in five needing to undergo surgery to treat their pelvic floor disorder (UCM). While most commonly associated with postpartum care, pelvic floor complications impact women as early as young adulthood and span through menopause and later into life. When left untreated, not only can pelvic pain interfere with quality of life that can lead to reduced performance at work and absenteeism, but it can also result in avoidable health complications and increased downstream medical costs. For instance, conditions such as endometriosis and sexual dysfunction are linked to untreated pelvic health issues, which can lead to infertility.

"This is another moment when Progyny is stepping up to help women identify and seek care for basic health needs that are going undiagnosed and untreated due to lack of education, lack of care access, and lack of the right benefits coverage," said Dr. Janet Choi, Progyny Chief Medical Officer. "By enabling access to specialty trained providers and offering educational support tools through a cost effective and comprehensive benefit, we are providing impactful clinical solutions as opposed to a 'sweep it under the rug' approach to women's health."

Virtual and In-Person Support Options for Treatment and Coaching

Progyny members will have expanded access to both in-person and virtual care options. Through this integrated and multi-pronged approach, members will benefit from earlier interventions for pelvic conditions, reducing fragmentation, and helping avoid delays that could lead to higher acuity treatments, surgeries, or increased healthcare costs for employers. Urinary incontinence alone has been associated with costing the healthcare industry $20 billion a year (NIH).

Progyny welcomes Origin and Hinge Health to its offering. With Origin, Progyny members can seamlessly access Origin's nationwide in-network pelvic floor physical therapy, both in-person and virtually. Origin provides evidence-based treatment for the full spectrum of pelvic health needs—from common concerns like leaky bladder, painful sex, and postpartum recovery, to more complex conditions including hysterectomy recovery, endometriosis, PCOS, and chronic pelvic pain. Origin's specialized physical therapists provide evidence-based care that addresses both physical and mental health through every stage of life, whether you're preparing for childbirth, recovering from surgery, or managing ongoing symptoms.

"Origin has been leading the way in destigmatizing the shame that still exists around the biggest milestones in women's lives and working to make pelvic floor therapy part of the standard of care," said Carine Carmy, CEO & Co-Founder, Origin. "Whether it's postpartum recovery or painful sex in menopause, our goal is to make personalized, whole-body care accessible to women wherever they are in their health journey."

With Hinge Health, members will receive digital care supported by physical therapists specializing in pelvic health and musculoskeletal (MSK) care. Each individual will follow a personalized plan with guided exercises targeting their unique symptoms – including but not limited to pelvic pain, a lack of pelvic strength or bladder control, and issues associated with menopause. By engaging regularly with these exercises, members build sustainable habits and make positive lifestyle adjustments that are proven to relieve symptoms and improve overall health.

"By combining expert clinical care and advanced technology, we are removing barriers to care access and enabling individuals to experience better health outcomes," said Aaryn Pure, Chief Commercial Officer, Hinge Health. "Our comprehensive pelvic health program, now offered in conjunction with Progyny, will bring their members high-quality pelvic health support as part of their broader women's health experience."
